Bernard Isaiah Rowe was born in Burbage on 27th April 1897. The eighth child of nine, his parent's John William Rowe and Anna Maria Bird originated from Great Glen. The family moved to Burbage in 1895 firstly living in Crosland's Row before moving to 21 Balls Lane, becoming neighbours of the Bradbury Family whose son Charles was also killed in WW1.

The family were all employed in the hosiery and knitwear industries and by the age of 13 Bernard was a frame helper in hosiery work. The Rowe family were related to the Coxs of Hogue Hall and would be aware of the dangers of serving on the front.

In March and April 1918 there was a period of crisis when the allied fifth army was driven back over the hard fought former Somme battlefields and there was bitter fighting in the months before the advance to victory which began in August 1918. There were over 14,000 casualties from the United Kingdom and South Africa. The Durham light Infantry lost over six hundred men including Bernard Rowe during the first month of the offensive.

Bernard was killed in action and has no known grave. His name is remembered on the wall panels at Poziers Memorial near where he fell.
